No. 781, Vol. XVI. New Series.]

ONE PENNY.

[Week Ending May 27th, 1916.

The Rebellious Cricketers Leave the New Captain in the Lurch!

THE TYRANT OF THE SCHOOL!

Magnificent New Long Complete Story, dealing with the Adventures of Jimmy Silver & Co. at Rookwood School.

OWEN CONQUEST.

The 1st Chapter. Startling News!

leard the news, you chaps?" d Muffin.

core Zepps?" yawned Jimmy lepps be blowed!" said Muffin "Something rather more ortant than Zepps. The Head's

What?" The Head!"

Going!" laking a sensation.

"He's going!" repeated Muffin. | walls of Rookwood itself. uffin of the Fourth burst into the "I've just heard Mr. Bootles tell mon-room on the Classical side at | Bulkeley so. Bootles looked awfully | wood breathless with excitement. | bothered, and old Bulkeley looked Raby. quite down in the mouth, you know. The Head's going!"

"Resigned?" asked Lovell.

"No; sacked!" a sensation. He looked round "Here, I say, hold on!" exclaimed and the school will be handed over to triumphantly as he made that state- Muffin, in alarm. "It's true-honest him. Chap named Scroop, selected dandy of the Fourth. ment. There was no doubt that it Injun! Bootles told Bulkeley so!" caused a sensation. The idea that 'Did he use the word 'sacked'?" place. I wonder what he'll be like? Dr. Chisholm, the revered Head of grinned Jimmy Silver. The Head's rather a beast in some Rookwood, could possibly be "Well, not exactly that word," said things, but we might go further and I them the Head had ecemed a perma- | ing board had requested the Head | "This is jolly bad news, if it's true |

The Classical juniors gathered nent institution, like the ancient to resign, on account of having adround him on all sides. beeches in the quad or the grey old ministered unjustifiably severe punish-

"Sacked!" yelled Flynn.
"The Head sacked!" ejaculated But he meant 'sacked."

"Rot!"

"Spoof!" Muffin of the Fourth liked to cause | "He's pulling our leg! Bonnet him!" | new Head's coming this evening, too,

"sacked" had never entered the Muffin cautiously. "But that's what fare worse." Nuffin of the Fourth had succeeded | minds of the Rookwood fellows. To | he meant. He said that the govern- "We might," agreed Jimmy Silver.

ment to a certain Rookwood boy.

"Gammon!" said Oswald. "Well, you'll jolly soon see!" said | heavy on Morny's pals." Muffin. "The Head's going this evening-soon, I think. Bootles is "Bonnet him!" said Newcome. going to the station with him. The by the governors to take the Head's

The Head's a jolly good chap-for a headmaster!"

"But they wouldn't sack the Head for licking a chap," said Lovell. "It must be all rot! Besides, who's the "Mornington! Mornington was flogged!" said Raby.

Jimmy Silver started a little. "My hat!" he exclaimed. "You remember Mornington's gas when he was flogged. He said the Head would have to go. His uncle's chairman of the governors. Mornington's had a hand in this!" "The uncle must be as big a cad as the nephew, in that case!" growled Lovell.

"Let's go and see Mornington. He may know all about it," said Oswald. "If he's had a hand in it we'll scrag

"Good egg!" Lord Mornington, the dandy of the Fourth, was not in the Commonroom. There was a rush to his study in the Fourth Form passage.

The juniors had little doubt that Mornington knew something about the exciting event. His uncle, Sir Rupert Stacpoole, was chairman of the governing board, and the dandy of the Fourth had openly declared that the Head would have to go for administering that flogging. The juniors, had grinned at the threat. Bull to healty booked how as Munord Mornington had known what he was talking about.

Jimmy Silver tapped at his lordship's door and opened it.

There was a haze of cigarette-smoke in the study. Morny & Co. were enjoying themselves after their own fashion. Townsend and Topham of the Fourth and Smythe and Howard of the Shell were in the study. The nuts of Rookwood were all smoking. They were also chatting and smiling, as if over something very entertaining. Lord Mornington looked at the crowd of juniors in the doorway with an insolent smile. "So you fellows have heard?"

grinned Townsend. And the nuts chuckled in chorus. This example of the power of their noble pal "bucked" the nuts very much. Lord Mornington was a great man in the eyes of his pals that day. "We've heard," said Jimmy Silver. "Muffin says the Head's going." Mornington nodded.

"He's goin', right enough!" "Do you know anything about it?"

"Well, what do you know?" demanded Lovell.

"I know that Dr. Chisholm's sacked," said Mornington coolly. "I told you so days ago. He's sacked for floggin' me."

"You asked for that flogging," said Jimmy Silver.

Mornington shrugged his shoulders. "Well. I said I'd make him sorry for it, and I have," he retorted. "But you needn't mind; the next Head will be a change for the better. I know Scroop," "Oh, you know him?" "Old friend of mine," yawned his lordship. "What a rippin' time we're goin' to have!" chortled Topham. "Morny's old friend won't come down

"You can rely on that," said his lordship. "Some cads who have been up against me can look out for squalls, though. I haven't forgotten!" Jimmy Silver looked steadily at the

"I don't know whether you're gassing, or whether you're telling the truth for once," he said. "But you're bragging of having got the Head sacked, and that's enough. Gentlemen, chaps, and fellows, I suggest showing these rotters what we think governors." of them."

(Continued on the next page.)

THE TYRANT OF THE SCHOOL!

"Hear, hear!".

"Collar the smoky beasts!" shouted Lovell.

starting to his feet. "Mind, I'll have | flogged recently, complained to his of the idea. The Modern juniors you flogged when Scroop comes! I'll guardian, and paid him a visit entered into it heartily. have you sacked-yarooooh!"

the study, and the Giddy Goats of called a meeting of the governors. I Rookwood were collared without cere- understand that there was a promony. Townsend gave a dreadful longed discussion, and the result was gurgle as his cigarette went into his that the Head was called upon to mouth. Lord Mornington descended resign his post here while an inquiry upon his expensive study carpet with a resounding bump. Smythe made a spring for the door and tripped over Raby's foot and rolled over.

The next few minutes seemed to the unfortunate nuts like a dozen earthquakes and Zeppelin attacks rolled into one.

When Jimmy Silver & Co. streamed out of the study they left five gasping and dishevelled fellows sprawling on the floor, amid overturned furniture and scattered cigarettes.

Lord Mornington sat up and panted. He had been looking forward to a great time under the reign of his | knitted brows. old friend, the new Head of Rookbeginning.

"Oh, gad!" groaned Adolphus in carrying out his threat. Yow!"

then! Let 'em wait!"

near future could not quite console them.

The 2nd Chapter, Under a Cloud.

Mr. Bootles, the master of the Fourth, wore a worried look as Jimmy Silver entered his study a little later. Jimmy noted it at once. The Formmaster passed his hand over his brow, and looked inquiringly at the captain of the Fourth.

"Yes, yes, what is it, Silverwhat, what?" said Mr. Bootles.

true that the Head is going?" "Yes, Silver. The whole school | nation.

If so, let me help you to increase your height. Mr. Briggs reports an increase of 5 inches; Mr. Lindon

3 inches; Miss Leedell 4 inches.

No drugs or appliances, Sand three penny stamps for further particulars and my £100 guarantee.— ARTHUR GIRVAN, Specialist in

the Increase of Height, Dept. A. M.P.,

17. Stroud Green Road, London, N.

Bootles, with a sigh. "You must not suppose, however, that any blame attaches to Dr. Chisholm. Neither is his resignation permanent, I trust and believe. The fact is, there is a misapprehension on the part of the

"Is that all, sir?" asked Jimmy, relieved.

"It is, however, of a somewhat serious nature," said Mr. Bootles. "It shortly afterwards to repeat his com-

The indignant juniors swarmed into a serious view of the matter, and is held. Meanwhile, a temporary headmaster will take his place. hope and believe that the matter will be settled in a satisfactory way. Meanwhile, the Head is leaving."

> "To-day, sir?" "Yes; very shortly. The new headmaster arrives to-day," said Mr. Bootles. "You may acquaint your Form-fellows with these details, Silver."

> And Mr. Bootles made a gesture of dismissal.

Jimmy Silver left the study, with wood. This was not a very promising of the Head was Mornington's work; pale and harassed. He seemed surthat his lordship had been successful prised at the sight of the crowd of

"Groogh!" moaned Townsend | the few who remained, and who had astonishment "Never mind!" said Mornington, stituted the meeting, vere friends | "Il's la a send off, sir," said any of the boys of your Form in this between his teeth. "Wait till Scroop of the chairman, and under his Jimmy Silver hesitating a little. comes! They'll change their tune influence. Doubtless the most had we're all sorry you're going sir. been made of Mornington's flogging; We hope you'll soon come back." But the nuts only groaned. Even | which had certainly been severe, | The Head smiled slightly. the prospect of dire vengeance in the though not a whit more severe than "Thank you, Silver! Thank you his lordship had deserved.

Jimmy could understand the pain and humiliation the governors' decision must have caused to the Head. True, his resignation was only temporary, and the chances were that he would be reinstated in all honour. But he was going now, under a cloud, after many years of his hat to the Rookwood crowd, and good service at the old school.

much in contact with the Head, and him in. he was a somewhat awful personage in their eyes. But they knew him as "If you please, sir, we've heard a just, if somewhat severe, master. some very surprising news," said The bare idea of his being "sacked" Jimmiy Silver respectfully. "Is it by the influence of the cad of Rookwood made them boil with indigexplained what the Fourth-Form "What!" master had told him.

Jimmy at the end of the passage, "Then what does this unseemly on agreeable terms of friendship wit eager for news.

was that cad that's done it! We'll bluntly.

make him sit up for it!" "He's more likely to make us sit dered the stranger.

headmaster," said Rawson.

"That's swank, most likely."

"More likely true. His uncle's claimed Raby."

"Great Scott!"

"You—you are Mr. Scroop!" exappointed the man, most likely. And it's clear that Mornington knows

"It's a rotten shame!"

"Who's coming to the station to see the Head off?" asked Jimmy Silver. "I think it's up to us to let | eyes of the new headmaster were not him know we're sorry he's going."
"Hear, hear!"

know that we're sorry to lose him."

"Good egg!" Jimmy's idea was acted upon at once. Jimmy cut over to the Modern "Hands off!" yelled Mornington, appears that Mornington, who was side to apprise Tommy Dodd & Co.

Quite an army of Rookwood juniors His lordship had no time for more. | plaints. Sir Rupert Stacpoole took | marched out of the gates. The car had come round to the Head's house to take him to the station, and it was clear that his departure would not be long delayed.

> There were fifty or sixty juniors in the crowd that marched into Coombe, and took up a position outside the little station,

The nuts of Rookwood were not | "If this is an example of the among them. But Lord Mornington | manners of Rookwood, I can see that and his friends were in a very small | I shall have much to alter there," said minority.

in the old village street.

"Here he comes!" said Jimmy Silver. "Now, you cheer when raise my hand. All together, mind."

"Right-ho!" The car stopped outside the station. Jimmy Silver ran forward to open the door, and the Head stepped out.

It was clear now that the departure | Dr. Chisholm was looking a little Rookwood juniors.

Smythe, sitting up feebly. "Oh, gad! Jimmy knew that several members "What does this mean?" he said. Yow-ow-wow! Oh, the beasts! of the governing board were absent Mr. Bootles, who followed him from on war service. It was probable that the car, blinked at the juniors in all, my boys!"

He passed into the station with Mr. Bootles.

Jimmy raised his hand.

A thunderous cheer broke forth, awaking every echo of the old street.

Dr. Chisholm started, and frowned a little. Then he smiled, and raised disappeared into the station. And The juniors, naturally, did not come another tremendous cheer followed

The 3rd Chapter. The New Head,

"What is all this?" A man had stepped from the will know it shortly," said Mr. A crowd of fellows were awaiting station entrance as the Rookwood juniors delivered their last salvo of cheering. Rook-The wooders had not noticed him until he spoke.

He was a tall, thin man, with a silk hat and a buttoned black coat that made him taller and look thinner. His face was hard and cold, with small eyes like points of steel, and a very square

He looked over Rookwood the with crowd. rowning brow.

Jimmy Silver

The question,

to Jimmy to savour of impertinence.

"Did you speak to me?" he asked. "To all of you. You are Rookwood boys, I pre-crowd and disturbance mean?"

to you, sir," said Jimmy Silver, asked a dozen voices.

"It's true," said Jimmy. And he puzzled and annoyed.

"What the dickens business is it of the new headmaster.

"It's rotten!" said Lovell. "So it yours?" demanded Lovell, more

"I am your headmaster!" thun-

"I am Mr. Scroop!"

"I-I beg your pardon, sir," stammered Jimmy, "Of course, I didn't know you."

Jimmy was dismayed.

The hard, cold face and metallic reassuring. Mr. Scroop looked as if he would have made a first-rate slave-"We'll give him three cheers on the driver. But he was not very preplatform," said Jimmy. "Then he'll possessing as a headmaster for Rook- station.

Evidently he had arrived in the train which was to bear away the former headmaster.

The two gentlemen had not encountered, however. Dr. Chisholm had not cared to remain to hand over the school to his successor. He had left that task to Mr. Manders, the senior master.

Mr. Bootles came out of the station, looking decidedly glum.

He, too, was unaware so far of the arrival of the new Head. He did not glance at Mr. Scroop till that gentleman's loud and disagreeable voice drew his attention.

Mr. Scroop. "What do you mean by The buzz of a motor-car was heard | gathering in a disorderly crowd in the street, and making this disturbance?" "We weren't making a disturbance, sir," said Jimmy Silver. "Then what were you doing?" "Seeing our headmaster off; sir."

"Indeed! That is no excuse for disorderly behaviour. Every boy here will take a hundred lines." "Oh!"

"Excuse me, sir," said Mr. Boctles, approaching the stranger. "Am I to understand--"

Mr. Scroop looked at him sharply. "Are you a Rookwood master?"

"I am master of the Fourth Form. "I am your new headmaster. Are disorderly crowd?" Mr. Bootles seemed almost "floored" by the grim and uncompromising manner of the new Head. "Ye-es," he said feebly. "A large number of my Form are here, Mr. Scroop."

"Then I cannot compliment you on the state of discipline in your Form.'

"Indeed!" "No, sir. Your name--"

"I am Mr. Bootles." "Very well, Mr. Bootles, I shall expect a change in the behaviour of the Fourth Form." "Indeed!" said Mr. Bootles, again, more drily than before. "Yes, indeed. I understand that the chums of the Fourth found Dr. Chisholm has gone?" "He has just left by train." most extraordinary proceeding!" snapped Mr. Scroop. should have expected him to remain at the school until I arrived!" "Indeed!"

"Mr. Bootles, kindly see that these boys return to the school at once, and that they perform the tasks I have already set them!"

"Very well, sir." Mr. Scroop turned away, and a deep groan from the crowd of juniors followed him. He swung back with a frowning brow.

"What-what is this? Who made that sound?" Silence.

"So this is how the boys of your Form are instructed to treat their headmaster, Mr. Bootles?" "Really, sir-" new Head grimly. "Every boy here has his imposition doubled. Now

The juniors went. They marched home to Rookwood such a case, but a flogging was out in a Hunnish frame of mind.

but he had come as a most unpleasant | indeed, and to give no excuse to surprise to them.

done no harm in seeing their head | severe punishment. master off at the station, but they returned to Rookwood the richer by two hundred lines each.

amount of growling. Mr. Bootles walked with the punishments to be administered.

the Head of Rookwood. The "Well, what does Bootles say?" | "I don't quite see what it matters | pleasant relationship was evidently a an end.

There was not likely to be any thing agreeable in his connection with

The party arrived at Rookwood and Mr. Bootles went at once into his study. The juniors gathered in groups to discuss the new situation. up, if a friend of his is going to be "Oh, my hat!" ejaculated Jimmy. Lord Mornington and his friends were lounging in the doorway of the School House. In spite of the recent ragging, his lordship seemed to be in great spirits. Jimmy Silver looked at him darkly Mornington was there to await the arrival of the new headmaster. The story of what had happened at the station soon spread through the school, and fellows gathered round to see the new Head when he came in. Mr. Scroop came in the car which had taken Dr. Chisholm to the

The car stopped outside the Sch House, and all eyes were fixed up the tall, thin figure of the new His as he alighted. "Oh, my hat! What a chivy murmured Dickinson minor, "Blessed gargoyle!" mutter Hooker.

Those remarks were not loud enough for the new Head to hear. however. The juniors "capped him very respectfully as he came up the steps.

The frown that seemed habitual Mr. Scroop's brow was still linger

It cleared a little, however, at sight of Lord Mornington.

His lordship approached the Head with a confident smile. "Ah, it is you, Mornington!" Mr. Scroop, shaking hands with junior. "I am glad to see you!"

He passed on into the house, wi out so much as a nod to any Lord Mornington looked tr phantly at his friends. "What was I tellin' you?" he marked.

"Hooray for us!" grinned Sm of the Shell. Jimmy Silver & Co. looked gusted. His lordship's boast that the Head was his old friend was evide not "swank," after all.

The dandy of the Fourth was ing forward to a "good t Doubtless his expectation was founded.

"We're goin' to celebrate t grinned his lordship. "Nothin" be afraid of now, my infants!"

The Fistical Four went to the study to write their lines, in a mo of dismay. They could foresee to a change was to come over the school under the rule of Lord Mo ington's old friend, Mr. Scroop. they were right.

The 4th Chapter. Caught in the Act,

Before the new headmaster" been a couple of days at Rook their forebodings fulfilled.

Matters had changed under new Head with a vengeance. Lovell remarked that Mr. Sch ought to have been born a Pruss and that he must have been both England by mistake. Nothing, certainly, could have more Prussian than the methods the new Head. The Rookwooders were not los discovering that Mr. Scroop was tyrant, who delighted in the exer of tyranny. He had his own ideas about son discipline, and his ideas were work of a Prussian pedagogue.

At Rookwood canings were common, and floggings were of a rare occurrence; but Mr. Scroop I changed all that.

On his second day at the scho there was a flogging, the victim ber "I shall make a change," said the Flynn of the Fourth, who had u tunately landed a cricket-ball the the Head's study window.

Certainly, Dr. Chisholm v have administered punishment all proportion to the fault.

They had not expected the new | The Rookwood fellows realised Head to equal their old headmaster, it behoved them to be very care tyrant, who was evidently on Jimmy Silver & Co. had certainly look-out for excuses to administ

On more than one occasion the new Head stepped into the Formrooms, and took the management of No wonder there were dark looks | the class out of the hands of the among them, and a considerable Form-masters. On such occasion faults were certain to be found, an juniors, with a very unhappy ex- The masters chafed under the interference as much as the puny

Our New Prize List contains hundreds of different kinds of free gifts, including Ladies' and Gents' Cycles, Gold and Silver Watches, Periscopes, Feathers, Chains, Rings, Fur Sets, Cinemas, Gramophones, Air Guns, Tea Sets, Toys, etc., etc. All you need do is to send us your Name and Address a postcard will do), and we will send you a selection of lovely cards to sell or use at 1d. each. When [] sold send the money obtained and we immediately forward gift chosen according to the Grand Illustrated List we send you. (Colonial Applications Invited.) Send a postcard now to-THE ROYAL CARD \V. CO., Dept. 3, KEW, LONDON

Famous Doctor's Recipe for this most distressing complaint, 6d. P.O. Never fails. Hundreds of

Using 12 Beautiful POSTCARDS

at 1d. each.

Testimonials .- Mr. GEORGE, 80. OLD CHURCH RD., CLEVEDON.

80 MAGIC TRICKS, Illustrations and Instructions. Also 40 Tricks with Cards. The lot post free 1/-.-

reader of this paper a splendid pre-each. (Gold Mounted, Embossed, & sent FREE simply for selling or using 12 Beautiful Postcards at 1d.

Patriotic Real Photos, Glossy, etc.).

T. W. HARRISON, 239, PENTONVILLE ROAD, LONDON. N.

3 to 5 inches. Without Appliances.

ROSS SYSTEM NEVER FAILS.

PRICE 7/6 COMPLETE.

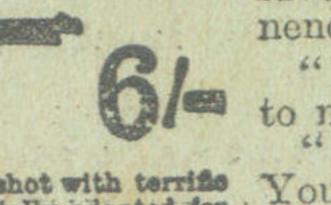

Particulars 2d. stamps.-H. ROSS, 73, CHURCH ROAD, HENDON, LONDON, N.W.

in a few days by a simple home treatment. Particulars free. Enclose stamp to pay postage.—Mr. B. A. TEMPLE from a perfect (Specialist), 39, Maddox Street, Regent Street, London, W. stranger, seemed

The most accurate air gun. Shoots slugs, darts, or shot with terrific force, and is guaranteed to kill at long range. Specially adapted for garden or saloon practice, bird and rabbit shooting, also for bottle and target practice. Securely packed, with sample of shot; postage to extra. Illustrated List, ld.—B. FRANKS & CO., Gun Manufac terers, Empire Works, Caroline Street, Birmingham.

"Oh, yes!"

pression on his face. The Fourth Form-master had been I did.

Mr. Manders, of the Modern side, was the only master who appeared to pull well with the new Head. He

"minding their p's and q's" with un- stood panting. usual care, it was curious that Lord Mornington was more reckless than | matter?" exclaimed Mr. Bootles.

brought him some severe punishments. But whatever restraint the fear of punishment had exercised was

The little smoking-parties in his lordship's study had been held "under the rose"; but now the dandy of the lacked the nerve to go through the Fourth seemed quite careless of discovery. His friends, relying upon his influence with the Head, became almost as reckless as himself.

Although Lord Mornington was the Head's favourite, it hardly seemed possible that Mr. Scroop could allow him to defy the rules of the school with impunity.

It was on the third day after the new Head's arrival that the matter was put to the test.

A select party of the Giddy Goats were celebrating in his lordship's study. They were "keeping it up" in unusual style, and the smell of tobacco pentrated from the study into the passage. Voices could be heard from the study, making such remarks as "Your deal!" or "Nap!"

"Those silly asses will find themself in trouble if a prefect happens to come along!" grunted Lovell, as he passed the door with Jimmy Silver. "I wonder!" said Jimmy.

"Suppose Bulkeley came up-" "Mornington knows he might," said Jimmy Silver. "He's counting on the Head protecting him!" "Scroop couldn't be such rotter! "I don't know."

"My hat!" murmured Lovell, looking back as they reached the end study. "Blessed if Bulkeley isn't there!"

"Phew!" The captain of Rookwood was coming along the passage. He stopped as he was passing the door; of Mornington's study. Lord Mornington's voice came floating from

"Let's make it poker! I'm tired of nap-a kid's game!" Bulkeley seemed rooted to the floor. He sniffed.

"By jingo!" he exclaimed. "Now look out for the fireworks," murmured Lovell. Bulkeley seized the door-handle and flung the door open, and strode into the study. The room was hazy with smoke.

Lord Mornington and Townsend and Topham were seated round the table, with cigarettes in their lips and cards in their hands.

Townsend and Topham dropped the cards as if they had become suddenly red-hot at the sight of the captain of the school.

with perfect calmness.

Fourth had an iron nerve.

juniors.

"and smoking! Well?" "Take a hand?" asked his lordship affably. "What!"

"Give Bulkeley a chair, Towny." Townsend did not move.

Bulkeley's face became crimson with anger. He strode towards Mornington, grasped him by the collar, and whipped him out of his chair.

"Hands off!" shouted Mornington.

"You'll come with me," said Bulkeley. "I'll take you to your Form-master. You two young rascals follow me." "Yes, Bulkeley!" gasped Topham.

"Let go!" yelled Mornington, "I'll kick your shins, Bulkeley!" "Will you?" said the Rookwood captain grimly. He jerked the Fourth-Former out "Sure they've asked for it." of the study.

Mornington struggled fiercely in the doorway and the passage. Bulkeley uttered a sharp exclamation as a heel hacked his shin,

"By Jove!" He shook the junior like a rat, till exclaimed Oswald. his teeth almost rattled. Then, with a grip like iron on his collar, he shoulders. marched him forcibly away to Mr. Bootles' study, followed by Townsend | he remarked oracularly. and Topham.

The 5th Chapter.

Published

Every Monday

Before the Head. Mr. Bootles started to his feet as was a man after Mr. Scroop's own the breathless, furious junior was bundled into his study. Bulkeley While Jimmy Silver & Co. were | released him there, and Mornington

"Bless my soul! What is the

"I thought I had better bring this The cad of the Fourth had always | young rascal to you, sir," said the been reckless, and under Dr. Chis- | prefect. "I have found him holm's rule his recklessness had gambling and smoking in his study." "Goodness gracious!"

"If-if you please, sir, it-it was only a lark," stammered Townsend. "We-we're sorry, sir!" mumbled Topham.

Towny and Toppy found that they ordeal now that the test had come. But Lord Mornington was not troubled with want of nerve. He met Mr. Bootles' horrified eyes coolly.

"Mornington!" gasped Mr. Jimmy Silver & Co. observed it, Bootles. "This is-is-is outrageous and wondered what would come of | -infamous! What have you to say, you wretched boy?"

"I appeal to the Head, sir!"

"What!" "I appeal to the Head!"

Mr. Bootles blinked at him. Any fellow had a right to appeal to | Scroop icily.

the Head if he liked, though as it | Bulkeley had not handed in suffigenerally meant a severer punish- cient reports for punishment to please "They were playing for money.

study, watched from a distance by an interested crowd.

"Wait here!" he said.

He tapped at the door and entered, leaving the three delinquents waiting in the passage. Townsend and Topham were pale with fright.

"Flogged, by gad!" groaned Top-

"We're in for it!" groaned Town-

ham. "You've got us into this, Mornington, you fool!"

Mornington laughed contemptu-

"It will be all screne," he said. "You've simply got to deny every-

"The Head won't take our word against a prefect's."

"Ten to one he does, in quids," said Mornington.

"But-but he can't!" "But he will!" said his lordship coolly. "Keep a stiff upper lip, and lie like a Prussian, and you're all Bulkeley had entered the study, and the Head greeted him with a smoking.' There was no love lost cold look. between the tyrant of Rookwood and the captain of the school.

"What is it, Bulkeley?" asked Mr.

"Kindly allow Mornington to finish, Bulkeley."

The prefect bit his lip.
"Now, Mornington-"

"As a matter of fact, sir," said Mornington calmly, "we were playing a game for-for nuts. Sort of Christmas game, sir. Towny and Toppy will bear me out."

Townsend and Topham gasped. On the table in Morny's study, the money they had been playing for was still

A falsehood that could immediately be discovered did not seem much use to the two juniors. But they followed Mornington's lead. "Yes, sir," said Topham.

"Just so, sir," faltered Townsend. Mr. Scroop frowned, but his frown was directed towards the astonished captain of Rookwood.

"You appear to have made a very serious mistake, Bulkeley," he said coldly.

"I. sir!" exclaimed Bulkeley. "These juniors were gambling and "They deny it." "Is their denial to be taken against my word, sir?" exclaimed Bulkeley. "I intend to be perfectly just, if that is what you mean. There is no harm in a game for nuts."

"Well, what did I tell you?" smiled

Mornington. Townsend and Topham, completely reassured now, chuckled gleefully. Lord Mornington looked vauntingly at Jimmy Silver & Co. as he passed

"Not licked, you see," he remarked.

"I see," said Jimmy grimly. The three nuts went on their way rejoicing. Jimmy Silver & Co. looked at one another.

"Well, my hat!" said Lovell. "Looks to me as if we'd better all pal on with Morny, and then we can do as we like! My word!"

> The 6th Chapter. His Lordship Has His Way!

"The Head, by Jove!"

Lovell made the remark in tones of surprise. It was Wednesday afternoon, and the Rookwood juniors were crowding Little Side. The Classicals and Moderns were to meet on the cricketfield, and stumps were already pitched. Lord Mornington and his friends were standing in a group before the pavilion, looking on. The "nuts" of Rookwood were not represented in either team. There was no room for slackers in either the Classical or Modern eleven. The juniors were surprised to see the new Head coming down to the cricket-field. Mr. Scroop had shown no sign, so far, of being interested in the great game.

"My hat!" said Jimmy Silver. "Coming to watch the match! More sense than I gave him credit for, by George!"

"Well, it's rather a compliment to junior teams," remarked Oswald. Dr. Chisholm didn't often honour our matches."

"Faith, and ye're right," said Flynn. "More likely he's going to chip in, though, and worry us. More like him intirely."

"Well, our consciences are clear for once," said Jimmy, laughing. "Even the Head can't have anything against us this afternoon. Ready, Tommy?"

"Quite," said Tommy Dodd, producing a penny.

The juniors "capped" the new Head as he arrived on the scene. It was necessary to show respect, even if they did not feel very much. They could see that Mr. Scroop had something to say to them, and they wondered what it was. Lord Mornington and the nuts were exchanging glances and smiles.

'Ah, you are playing cricket this afternoon!" said the Head, in a more genial tone than the juniors were accustomed to hear from him.

"Yes, sir," said Jimmy Silver. "You are playing. Mornington?" "No, sir," said Mornington. "I'm not in the team."

The Head frowned.

"Really, Mornington, I am surprised at this! Your guardian is specially desirous that you should take a share in outdoor sports." "It isn't my fault, sir. I'm not allowed in the team. "Nonsense! Who is captain here?"

"I am, sir," said Jimmy Silver very quietly.

"Put Lord Mornington into the team. Why have you left him out?" "He is no good, sir," said Jimmy. "Chap can't play for the side unless he keeps to practice and gets into form."

"Don't be impertinent, Silver! You will play Lord Mornington, by my order," said the Head. Jimmy's lips set obstinately.

This was a barefaced invasion of his rights, and Jimmy was not disposed to surrender his rights to anyone, even the headmaster himself.

The favouritism the new Head had shown to Lord Mornington could not have been carried further. It seemed to Jimmy Silver that the limit had been reached.

"You hear me, Silver?" said Mr. Scroop, as the captain of the Fourth did not reply. "Yes, sir." "Very well, do as I tell you."

"Excuse me, sir, I can't play Mornington." "What!"

"It's impossible, sir! He's a rotten cricketer, and I can't throw the match away."

Jimmy's tone was very quiet, and very determined. The cricketers looked on in silence.

Mr. Scroop flushed deeply.

"Do you mean that you disobey me, Silver?" "Nunno, sir. Only a cricket captain has the right to select his own eleven. I'd put Mornington in if he were any good. But he's no good at Mr. Scroop pointed to the School

"Go indoors at once, Silver. You

"What does this mean?" said the Head, who was surprised at the crowd of juniors. "It's a-a send-off, sir," said Jimmy Silver. "We're all sorry you're going, sir. We hope you'll soon come back!"

Rascal as he was, the dandy of the knew what he was doing.

Bulkeley stared grimly at the three peated Mr. Bootles, "Very well! choice about the matter; he was nington." Bulkeley, will you take this wretched "Card-playing," he ejaculated, boy to Mr. Scroop's study?"

"Certainly, sir," said Bulkeley. "Come with me, Mornington."

"I'll come," said his lordship coolly. "But you can keep your paws off me. I won't stand that." The captain of Rookwood did not reply, but he fastened a grip on Mornington's collar again. "Come!" he said briefly.

His lordship was marched out of the study, and Townsend and Topham brought up the rear again. A hundred pairs of eyes watched them on the way to the Head's study.

"They've done it this time!" remarked Rawson.

"Fairly done it!" said Flynn. "Sure the baste flogged me for breakin' his window! They're booked!"

"Another flogging!" grunted Oswald. "We shall be getting one every day at this rate."

"Sure they've asked for it, but they he exclaimed."

"Are these the boys, Bulkeley?" "Mornington knew what he was about when he appealed to the Head."

"But the Head can't let him off!"

Jimmy Silver shrugged his | Mornington calmly.

Bulkeley arrived at the Head's | hand-"

Lord Mornington went on dealing | ment, it was a right not often | the new Head. The Sixth-Former | The money is still there, if you would exercised. But Lord Mornington | had no intention whatever of lending | care to step as far as their study, sir." his aid to the tyrant in that way. On | "It seems to me hardly worth "You appeal to the Head!" re- this occasion, however, he had no while. I have great faith in Morbound to make his report when the matter was serious.

"I have a report to make, sir," said Bulkeley. "Three juniors smoking and gambling in a study. Mr. Bootles has referred the matter to

Mr. Scroop's hard face relaxed a

"Quite right. Bulkeley-quite right. I have thought that you were somewhat lax in these matters, but I am glad to see that I was mistaken. Undoubtedly this is a matter for me to deal with. Call them in." The new Head selected a canca Bulkeley stepped to the door. "You may come in," he said. The three juniors entered-Mor-nington cool and self-possessed, and Townsend and Topham with their knees knocking together. Mr. Scroop started a little at the sight of his lordship, and laid the cane on the desk.

won't get it," said Jimmy Silver. "Yes, sir-Mornington, Townsend, and Topham."

> "What have you to say, Mornington?" asked Mr. Scroop, in his kindest tone. "Bulkeley is mistaken, sir," said

"Mistaken!" exclaimed Bulkeley. "We shall see what we shall see!" | "Why, you impudent young rascal, I

"Is that the case, Mornington?"

"They were smoking, too!" said

"Not at all, sir. Bulkeley is mistaken." "Really, Bulkeley--"

Head was unbounded.

Bulkeley.

"How could I be mistaken in such a matter?" exclaimed the amazed prefect. "Besides, they smell of tobacco now, and their fingers are stained."

"We've been doing some chemistry,

I sir," said Mornington calmly.

"That's where the stains came from." Towny and Toppy blinked at one another. What use there was in a palpable falsehood of that kind, they could not see. But they saw soon. Mr. Scroop was determined to believe what he had already intended to believe. It was evident that Lord Mornington's influence with the new

"I accept your assurance, Mornington," said Mr. Scroop. "You may go. Bulkeley, I trust you will be more careful on another occasion." Bulkeley gasped.

"If you do not choose to punish them, sir, I have no more to say," he stuttered. "It is in your hands, of course, "

"Exactly. You may go." Bulkeley went without another word. The three nuts grinned as he found you with the cards in your strode away down the passage with House. knitted brows.

THE Continued TYRANT from OF THE the previous SCHOOL! page.

Published

will take five hundred lines of Virgil, and write them out before tea.

Jimmy did not move for a moment. But resistance was hopeless, and he turned on his heel and walked away towards the House.

Lovell & Co. exchanged furious

The Moderns looked on in grim silence. Mr. Scroop gave the juniors a sour glance, and spoke to Mornington again:

"Mornington, you will take Silver's place in the eleven, and act as captain.' "Yes, sir," said Mornington,

"Then I jolly well won't play, for one!" broke out Lovell hotly. "I shall make a few changes in the team," grinned Mornington, as the Head moved away and sat down in a cane chair before the pavilion. "Lovell and Raby and Newcome can clear off. They won't be wanted. You too, Oswald." "We should, anyway!" said Raby disdainfully.

"Yes, rather!" said Oswald emphatically. "You've got no choice about it," sneered Mornington. "Towny, I of the team will do." "Sure, and ye can make another change!" growled Flynn. "I'm not playin' for ye, ye swankin' spal-"Same here!" said Jones minor.

"Put in another silly idiot like yourself, Mornington. I'm sticking to keen interest. There was not a he called to Townsend as he passed. Jimmy Silver!" "And I!"

"Me, too!"

Lovell And the whole team walked off the | did not choose.

field in a body.

member of the Classical eleven was willing to play under his lead. But he shrugged his shoulders.

"Let them go," said Townsend. "You can easily make up a team from your own friends, Morny."
"You bet!" said his lordship. "I'll do it, too! Tracy and Selwyn and Chesney and Beaufort and Muffin." "We're on!" grinned Tracy.

·lordship. Tommy Dodd put the penny back into his pocket, looking his lordship up and down with a glance of contempt that made even Mornington flush a little.

"Do you think we're going to waste an afternoon playing such a team of fumbling duffers?" said Tommy Dodd. "Not much!"

"The game's off," said Tommy Cook.

"Come on!" said Tommy Doyle. "Let's get out on the river. We'll play Jimmy Silver's team another

The Modern eleven walked off. Lord Mornington stood rooted to the ground, his face crimson with anger.

The Head's interference had effectually "quashed" Jimmy Silver & Co. But that was not of much benefit if there was to be no match at all, But Tommy Dodd had counted without the Head.

Mr. Scroop had not heard all that had passed, but he could see, and he rose to his feet as the Moderns walked

"Dodd!" he called out.

turned round. "Yes, sir."

"Where are you going?" "We're going on the river this afternoon, sir."

"You came here to play cricket?" "Yes, but-"

"You will play the match as arranged, Dodd. Not a word. I think I have made you understand that I brook no impertinence."

Lord Mornington smiled.

Head's commands was not to be thought of-not yet, at all events. The habit of discipline was strong, and the Rockwood fellows had not yet reached the breaking-point.

In silence, but with bitter anger in his face, Tommy Dodd tossed for innings with Lord Mornington. Only the presence of the Head prevented him from planting his fist full in the mocking face of the cad of the Fourth.

"You bat first," said Mornington. Tommy Dodd nodded without speaking. Lord Mornington and his precious eleven went into the field. Tommy Dodd's face cleared as he exchanged a few whispered words with his men.

Then there was an outbreak of grinning among the Modern cricketers. The Moderns were forced to play in the match. But there is an old proverb that it is possible to take a horse to water, but not to make him drink. The match had to be played, but Tommy Dodd had his own ideas as to how it was to be played.

The 7th Chapter. Very Entertaining Cricket.

Tommy Dodd opened the innings with Doyle.

The Head remained in his seat beshall want you, and Toppy and Peele | fore the pavilion. Apparently he inand Smythe and Howard. The rest | tended to watch the cricket. Tommy | much satisfaction in playing it out. Dodd & Co. were inwardly resolved that he should see some cricket worth ! watching.

the first over. The fellows round the | pieces, and Tommy came off with a field, wondering how that curious broad grin. match would turn out, looked on with I bowler in Mornington's team gapable "Ye're as dea lly a bowler as Morny of taking Tommy Dood's wicket, and bedad. the two Tommies could have remained "Come on, all of you!" exclaimed | at the wickets all the afternoon if they had so chosen. As it happened, they

Lord Mornington looked non- it missed Tommy's wicket by a foot. cricket-match. The shouts of laughter plussed for a moment. Not a single | But the wicket went down-floored by | from the crowd round the field would Tommy Dodd's bat.

the Fifth. "Clumsy young ass! them going out in turn to the first

Tommy Dodd smiled at him, and went | fifteen minutes. As it was a singleto the pavilion. Tommy Cook took | innings match, the rival team had not his place, exchanging a grin with him | much to do to secure a victory. But as he came in.

the mark, and knocked out the leg "Come on," said Tommy Dodd. gloomy. stump. Tommy Cook watched it do "We field now. We shall have to for him. did not make a movement with the going to be beaten hollow."

"How's that?" called out Morning-"Out!" said Jobson.

Tommy Doyle, at the other end of the | cacklin'." pitch, gave a chortle.

came in.

Lord Mornington sent the ball whizzing down again. It was a ball that a fag in the Second Form could have played with ease. But Lacy did not play it. He held his bat well out of the way, and watched his wicket go down with a cheery smile.

"Out!" "My hat!" said Lacy, laughing. He returned to the pavilion. Towle of the Fourth yawned, and came in next.

glittering now.

the Moderns were simply pulling his laughter. leg. He had insisted upon playing "Congratulations, Morny," yawned

The Moderns came back slowly. not pleased with it, and the crowd marveelyous!" There was fierce rebellion in their were laughing instead of cheering. "You spoofin' cads!" hissed his for other chaps."

should you miss reading this splendi "Hear, hear!"

story.)

the Moderns' little game by this

Crash! Towle's wicket went down, without Towle making the slightest effort to defend it. Towle blinked at | Jobson.

"Is that out, Jobby?" he asked. "Ha, ha! Yes!" chortled Jobson. Towle walked off the pitch.

minutes, and the bowler ought to have Dodd, and struck him full in the face. been distinctly pleased. But he Tommy staggered back for a wasn't! His face was crimson with moment. rage. The shouts of laughter from the onlookers added to his fury.

Price of the Fourth came in next, grinning. Mornington shouted to him along the pitch.

"Keep your wicket up! Don't play the giddy goat, Price!"

Price looked at him coolly. "Are you batting or bowling?" he

"Bowling, you fathead!"

"Well, keep to your bowling, and leave me to bat my own way," said Price, and he clumped down his bat a yard off the crease.

"You're not looking after your wicket!" shouted Mornington, almost beside himself with anger and chagrin.

"Whose wicket is it?" demanded Price. "I suppose I can do as I like with my own wicket, can't I?" "Ha, ha, ha!"

Lord Mornington bowled, with a savage scowl. As Price's bat was nowhere in the way, the wicket went down, the bails scattered. "Out!" chortled Jobson.

"Awful luck-what?" said Price, with a grin. "That bowler's a terror, isn't he? Did you ever see wickets go down like that before? They ought to put Morny in the First Eleven, they ought really." Another batsman came in, and Lord Mornington's last ball knocked his bails off. The bowler had taken six wickets for the over. But he did not look pleased. The field did not look pleased, either. As the match was reduced to a farce, there was not

The field crossed over, however, and Townsend took up the bowling from the other end. At the first ball, Lord Mornington went on to bowl Tommy Doyle's wicket went into

"Sure, it's a terror ye are intirely," "Ha, ha, ha!"

"Man in!" chortled Tommy Dodd. The Head was looking on, puzzled. He did not know much about cricket, Mornington sent down the ball, and | but he knew that this was a very odd have told him as much.

"Hit wicket!" ejaculated Jobson of Man after man went in, each of ball. The Modern eleven were all Jobson was umpire at that end. down for nothing in the space of they were not looking happy about Townsend fielded the ball, and Lord | it. It was no great pleasure to be "Now we'll toss, Dodd," said his Mornington bowled again.

ordship.

This time the ball came nearer to Moderns.

so with an air of polite interest. He | buck up awfully hard if we're not

"Ha, ha, ha!" The Moderns went into the field. "Dash it all, it's no good battin'," growled Townsend. "They're only "Yes, isn't it?" said Tommy Cook. | foolin' us, and the whole school's Lord Mornington ground his teeth. Cook took away his bat, and Lacy "I'll make them sorry for it, somehow!" he muttered. "Field's waiting, Mornington!" called out Jobson of the Fifth.

Lord Mornington grunted, and came in with Smythe. Mornington took the bowling from the pavilion end. Tommy Dodd went on to bowl, and trundled the ball down under-arm in the easiest possible manner. Mornington sulkily cut it away, and the batsmen ran.

The ball had been knocked fairly to Tommy Cook's feet at mid-wicket. Lord Mornington's eyes were He picked it up in a leisurely way. The batsmen were crossing the pitch, He had been delighted at taking and either wicket was at Cook's Tommy Dodd's wicket so easily. His mercy. He calculated carefully, and The Modern captain halted and pleasure had been mixed with doubt threw in the ball, missing the batswhen Cook's wicket fell. But there | man's wicket by a couple of yards. was no more doubt in the case of The batsmen made good, and the run Lacy's wicket. He understood that was secured amid a howl of > the match against their will. The Tommy Dodd. "You've beaten us-Head's authority compelled them to beat us to the wide. All in twenty play. But nothing could compel them | minutes, too! Wonderful perform- | ington." to play seriously.

>
> Mornington gritted his teeth, and "Marvellous!" said Tommy Cook

Tommy Dodd looked surprised and pained.

"My dear chap, what do you want? something else. If you fellows hav You've beaten us at cricket, and finished tea we'll go and see him you've still got the afternoon before you to smoke and play nap. more do you want?"

"Ha, ha, ha!" Lord Mornington snapped his teeth, Four wickets had fallen in five and stepped suddenly towards Tommy

> But it was only for a moment. The next, his right shot out, straight from the shoulder, and Lord Mornington, with a yell, rolled over in the grass.

The 8th Chapter. A Roland for an Oliver.

"Dodd!"

Tommy Dodd had forgotten the Head. He remembered him as the harsh, angry voice thundered out. "Dodd! How dare you?"

Lord Mornington sat up stupidly, blinking and rubbing his nose. Tommy Dodd faced the new Head

"You saw what he did, sir," he said "Don't bandy words with me, said Mr. Scroop harshly. "Follow me at once!"

Tommy Dodd hesitated.

He strode away towards the School House.

He understood that he was going to be caned severely. If Mornington had been caned also, Tommy would have had nothing to complain of. But his lordship, evidently, was to go unpunished; Tommy was to take the punishment for the two. He clenched his hands, and stood where he was.

"Better go," whispered Cook, with rather a scared look.

Tommy Dodd paused, a long pause. Then, with slow and reluctant steps, he followed Mr. Scroop to the house. The juniors watched him go, with grim faces. Lord Mornington staggered to his feet, dabbing his nose with his handkerchief. His nose was streaming red.

Tommy Dodd's friends waited for him to emerge from the Head's study. They heard the swishing of a cane from that dreaded apartment, but no sound from Tommy. When the junior came out at last, his face was pale, and his lips tightly set. "Had it bad?" said Tommy Doyle sympathetically. Dodd nodded without speaking.

wanted to be alone after that lick- cricket-stump wielded by Jimmy ing. Tough as Tommy Dodd was, Silver's powerful arm. he had had as much as he could juniors that afternoon. Tommy Now you're going to have five hun-Dodd was shut up in his study, and dred lines, to make up for mine. Jimmy Silver was grinding out lines | See?" in the Fourth-Form room. Lord Mornington was in his study with his friends, and with a swollen nose. The nuts of Rookwood were enjoying themselves in their own peculiar way, and the atmosphere of the study resembled that of a tap-room.

Jimmy Silver came into the end study at tea-time, looking tired and gloomy. His chums had tea ready

"Nice afternoon?" groaned Jimmy. "Oh, ripping!" said Lovell dismally. "I say, we sha'n't be able to stand this, you know."

"How did the match go?" Lovell & Co. grinned, and Jimmy Silver laughed when he heard the story of the cricket match. Tommy Dodd came into the study while the Fistical Four were having their tea. He was still looking pale.

"Hallo, you Modern bounder!" said Jimmy Silver. "I want to speak to you fellows," said Tommy Dodd. "We're not going to stand this much longer. cricket's mucked up for the season if that brute is going to interfere with the matches." "Looks like it!" growled Raby.

"I've been licked for knocking Mornington down, though he punched me first. It's rotten favouritism, of course. If this goes on, something will have to go." "Can't back up against the Head," said Newcome doubtfully.

once," said Jimmy Silver. "And the the study fire with. And remember Head is worse than Manders-ten my pippin, that every time you sneak times worse. Mornington's got in- to the Head you're going to get a fluence with him, and he's using it good as you give-impot for impot like a cad. But we can put a stop to licking for licking!"

"By making an example of Morn-

"That may stop him," said Jimm Silver. "If it doesn't, we'll tr Bring a stump."

"I'm on." said Tommy Dodo

Most of the Fourth Form were o when they heard what was toward. After tea nearly all the Fourt Form presented themselves at Morr ington's study door. Jimmy Silve kicked the door open and marche

"Dodd's been licked, Mornington, he said abruptly.

His lordship smiled.

"He'll get licked again if he' cheeky!" he remarked. "And so wi the rest of you. The sooner yo understand that you've got to toe th line the better it will be for you!"

"Yes, rather!" chortled Townsend "Dodd's licking is going to b passed on to you, Mornington," sai Jimmy. "That's going to happen every time. See?"

"If you touch me--"

"Collar him!"

"Help!"

Lord Mornington jumped up, and was immediately collared and flung across the table. There was a crasl of crockeryware, and loud exclama tions from Townsend and Tophan and Peele as they crowded back ou of the way.

"Rescue!" "Look here-" began Townsend "Kick those rotters out!" said yelled

Mornington

Jimmy Silver. The three nuts were promptly bundled into the passage, and kicked along to the stairs, where they were glad to take to their heels. His lordship did not escape s easily.

Half a dozen pairs of hands pinned him down, face downwards, across th table, and Jimmy Silver grasped th cricket-stump.

"How many did the Head give you. Doddy?" he asked.

"Eight!" "Then there's eight for Morny." "Let me go!" shrieked Morning-ton. "If you dare-" Whack! "Yow-ow! Help!"

Whack, whack, whack! Mornington struggled and kicked furiously. But he was held fast, and the cricket-stump rose and fell with mathematical precision. Whack, whack, whack whack! The strokes were well laid on, A Hogging would not have been much He went away to his study; he more severe than the strokes of the

"That's the lot," said Jimmy cheerily. "Now, Mornington, you've There were black looks among the had a licking for Tommy Dodd's.

"Hear, hear!" chorused the delighted juniors. Mornington rolled off the table, white with rage.

"I won't!" he shrieked. Jimmy shrugged his shoulders. "You'll be given two hours," he said. "We'll come back then, and if the lines are not written you'll have a flogging-same as would have haplines. I give you my word on that! Come on, you fellows!" The juniors left the study, Jimmy locking the door on the outside and pened to me if I hadn't done my taking away the key. For two hours the dandy of the Fourth remained locked in his study. When that space of time had elapsed the Fistical Four returned. Whether Mornington had written his imposition-imposed by Jimmy Silverthey did not know, but they knew what he would get if he hadn't! His lordship knew it, too! On the table lay sheets and sheets of impot-paper, covered with scrawling lines. His lordship gave Jimmy Silver & Co. a look of bitter hatred.

Jimmy counted the pages, "Not quite done," he said-"twenty more lines, Mornington."

"Hang you!" "Are you going to finish them?" "Hang you! Yes!" And finish them Mornington did.

"Good!" said Jimmy Silver, taking "We backed up against Manders up the pages. "This will do to light that." And Lord Mornington was left the How?" himself. THE END.

"The Head will chip in again." | (Another magnificent long com "Let him! Tommy's had a licking | plete tale of Jimmy Silver & Co. i bowled to Towle. He had already solemnly. "Winning a match with on Mornington's account. That's got next Monday's issue of the Boxs. performed the hat-trick; but he was all the wickets in hand like that to be squared. Mornington's going FRIEND, entitled "The Revo to have a licking for every one he gets | Against the Head!" On no accoun